Washington Alexandria Architecture Center
The Washington-Alexandria Architecture Center has been functioning as the urban extension of the Virginia Tech College of Architecture and Urban Studies, School of Architecture + Design in the Washington Metropolitan Area since 1980. Since 1985, the Center has served to house a Consortium of architectural schools engaging the following universities:

Bauhaus-University of Weimar, Weimar, Germany
California Polytechnic State University, San Luis Obispo, California
Mississippi State, Mississippi
Louisiana State University, Baton Rouge, Louisiana
Oxford Brookes University, Oxford, United Kingdom
Tallinn Art University, Tallinn, Estonia
Technion, Haifa, Israel
Texas A&M University, College Station, Texas
Universidad del Desarrollo, Santiago, Chile
University of Mendoza, Mendoza, Argentina
Universidad San Francisco de Quito, Quito, Ecuador
UNAM, Mexico
Yokohama National University, Yokohama, Japan

The Washington-Alexandria Architecture Center seeks to explore and expand design pedagogies and design processes related to the urban environment. It is ideally situated to utilize the resources of the national and international design development/planning community in the Washington/Baltimore Metropolitan area. Visiting lecturers and adjunct faculty enrich the Center curriculum, and the Center participates in many collaborative efforts with metropolitan entities such as the Smithsonian Institution and the National Building Museum.

The Center enrolls students in their fourth, fifth, and graduate years of study, and grants degrees in the M. Arch. 1 program for those students with a five-year professional degree, and the M. Arch. 2 program for students with a four-year Bachelor of Science in Architecture degree. M. Arch 3 students (those students with initially a non-architectural baccalaureate degree) are able to attend the Center during their thesis level of study after having completed their first two years at the main campus in Blacksburg, Virginia. The Center also offers a Master of Landscape Architecture degree in a joint program with George Washington University. A Ph.D. in Architecture and Design Research with a concentration in Architectural Representation and Education, is available to qualified candidates.

All schools participating in the Consortium share the common goal of providing their respective students with an academic environment that utilizes the metropolitan area as an educational laboratory in which to pursue studies of architecture, landscape architecture, urban design and planning. Each member school provides 5-15 students and one faculty member for an academic year, thereby establishing a diverse student body, varied faculty perspectives, and a broad educational program for those choosing to study at the Consortium. All students remain enrolled in their individual schools, and courses are designed to provide appropriate academic credit for member institutions. All students must be upper-year undergraduates or at the Masters level to participate as Consortium residents.

The many architectural firms in the area also provide opportunities for paid office experience to students of the Center, and class schedules are arranged to facilitate up to twenty hours of professional work weekly.

The Center is committed to individual professional growth through the design process as revealed and validated by the produced work. It has faith in the value of architectural elements synthesized through both reason and intuition. It honors research leading to codified objective knowledge in an evolutionary process of reconsideration and representation. This assures the Center a polemic ranging from the philosophic through the scientific, without a rigid dogma, and with a sense of individual responsibility. Construction and Design are inclusive of all cultures, originating in the common unity of the human condition and, like all endeavors, are the product of desire and reason, of dream and detail.
